AIBS Training Programs

Science Policy and Media: Presentations and Workshops

AIBS presentations and training workshops provide scientists and educators with the knowledge and skills required to effectively communicate with policymakers, reporters, and the public.

One-hour presentations are ideal for departmental seminars or as segments in broader thematic programs. These talks explore current science policy issues, such as national science policy, climate change policy, STEM Ed policy, among others.

Multi-hour and day-long workshops provide scientists with the knowledge and hands-on training that helps individuals become effective communicators of science to policymakers, reporters, university administrators, and the general public.

One-hour talk, two-hour workshop, and half-day or longer courses available.
