Publishing new research from the full spectrum of ornithology since 1899.

THE CONDOR ONLINE: Access the Cooper Ornithological Society's website, <www.cooper.org>, to find Tables of Contents and Abstracts for issues from February 2001 through the forthcoming issue, in English and Spanish. The COS website also provides prospective authors with current instructions for authors.

COVER: Riparian corridors in the southwestern United States support high avian diversity, but have been negatively affected by altered hydrologic regimes and invasion by salt cedar (Tamarix spp.). Brand et al. (p. 199) examined factors influencing avian communities along the San Pedro River, one of the last free-flowing rivers in the region. Native woodlands dominated by cottonwood (Populus fremontii) or mesquite (Prosopis spp.) supported the highest levels of species richness and unique species, including canopy species such as Summer Tanager (Piranga rubra). Salt cedar stands had lower species richness and contributed little to regional avian diversity compared with native woody riparian vegetation.
